App with Proprietary Source Code

Should client contract with us to write custom code for a website application, this code is not transferable to a new developer or another Host. Custom written source code is considered the property of Aurora Technologies Web Development and cannot be shared with other developers. Clients are granted a license to use custom software code while on Aurora technologies servers only. Aurora technologies Web Development retains ownership of the code.

In some cases, Aurora technologies will install software for the client's use that has been built by a third party. Examples include WordPress blog software, FCK editor software, shopping carts, photo galleries, etc. In these instances, clients will be subject to the terms and conditions of the third party who owns the software, and may use the software as a licensee only. No ownership rights of any kind are transferred to the client.

Access to or transfer of proprietary source code could result in a security risk to Aurora technologies and its clients who are running similar pieces of code. In order to provide custom software development services, clients give us access to private and/or sensitive information, trade secrets, proprietary pricing and business methods. If clients believed that we may be sharing this information with outside developers, they could lose faith that we are protecting their proprietary information. Therefore, neither access nor transfer of any code built for any purpose that is unique and not commonly and publicly available can be granted.

Website components that ARE transferable to another host include html code, graphics, logos, pictures, navigation, text, and the data residing within a database (but not the code). Hourly fees will apply for any special work that needs to be done to transfer those parts of website that do not violate the other paragraphs in this section.
